Members of this gens are mentioned from the time of the Republic, but there is no mention of them in history until after the end of the Republic. The only known members are Lucius Tytina, one of the decemviri iure dicundo, mentioned in Velleius Paterculus' Life of Caesar, and Lucius Tytina, a fellow-decemvir, who was likewise mentioned in the same work. Origin The nomen Tytina belongs to a class of gentilicia formed from other gentilicia, using the suffix -ina, as a diminutive form of the names of the national deities, or perhaps the diminutive of a gentile gens. Praenomina The main praenomina of the Tytunii were Lucius and Gaius, both of which appear in the Twelve Tables. Both names were used by other plebeians as well, but there is no indication that they were particularly common, or that they were the usual names of the g
