The Osteoporosis Self-Assessment Questionnaire (OSA) is the most extensively validated questionnaire for assessing osteoporosis risk factors. In other research settings, it has been shown to be comparable to, and even better than, other screening tools. However, there are large differences in results across studies depending on the cultural background of the study population. The purpose of this study was to test the dimensional structure of the OSA in a large sample of adults from a multiethnic U.S. population. The OSA, the Health History Questionnaire (Health Q), and a series of health-related questions from the National Health and Nutrition Examination Survey (NHANES) were administered to 2,033 white, African American, Hispanic, and Asian American adults. Confirmatory factor analyses were performed to test the unidimensional structure of these items within each of the four ethnic groups. The best fitting model for the overall sample was a unidimensional confirmatory factor analysis. Nevertheless, the confirmatory factor analyses for the individual ethnic groups all indicated a two-dimensional structure, with bone health and nutritional factors loading on the first dimension and back pain and falls on the second. These findings confirm the importance of taking into account the
